Suspects last seen parachuting from Trump Tower

Police have released photos of three men suspected of parachuting off the roof of Trump Tower, the city's second-highest skyscraper, shortly after midnight Thursday.

The three broke into the top level of the building at 401 N. Wabash Ave. around 12:30 a.m. and gained entry to the roof, according to Police News Affairs Officer Ronald Gaines.

Someone saw the group jump off the roof in parachutes, Gaines said.

Surveillance photos show three men, one of them in a dress shirt and tie, walking up the stairs of the building. They can be seen carrying packs on their backs, apparently their chutes.

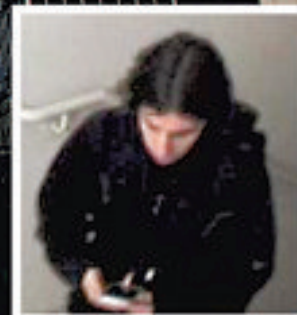

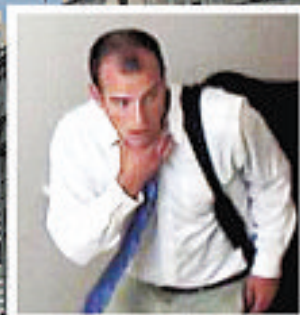

The building stands 92 stories tall. The highest roof is about 1,200 feet off the ground.

In July 2010, parachuters jumped off the Trump Tower during filming of the movie "Transformers 3" and glided down onto Wacker Drive across the Chicago River.

In April 2011, Shaun Walters was arrested after he parachuted from an unfinished building on Wacker Drive and landed near a Chicago police car 26 stories below. He was promptly arrested and charged with misdemeanor reckless conduct. Walters said he was part of a small community of BASE jumpers. Their name comes from the objects they seek to jump from: buildings, antennas, spans (bridges) and earth (usually cliffs). TRIBUNE

James Gandolfini: Larger than life

John Hickey

» redeye@tribune.com
» @johnnyhickey

As news spread Wednesday of the shocking and all-too-abrupt death of James Gandolfini, the lyrics of a song echoed through my head. The song is "Wrapped in My Memory," by Shawn Smith, and it's featured in "Long Term Parking," an episode from Season 5 of "The Sopranos."

Standing on that stage

Tell us what you've been feeling

Before you started to fade

You gave me something to believe in

There has never been a more captivating and divisive character than Tony Soprano in the history of TV.

Consider the hourlong dramas you binge-watch today. The conflicted protagonists of these worlds—the Don Drapers, Walter Whites and Dexter Morgans—would not exist if not for Tony Soprano. And Tony Soprano would not exist if not for Gandolfini's award-winning portrayal of the New Jersey mob boss.

He got his big-screen break in the 1993 cult classic "True Romance." This is where I first encountered the hulking, heavy-breathing man who had such a sadness and tenderness about him. Despite Gandolfini's role as a thug grappling in a motel bathroom with Patricia Arquette, I couldn't help but be drawn to him.

While my bias is apparent, there aren't many critics of his performance as father and mob boss of the Soprano family. Gandolfini made you hate Tony when he strangled a strange man on a college visit with his daughter, then love him when he helped his nephew Christopher battle a crippling drug addiction.

Soprano ran both of his families, criminal and blood alike, through squinted eyes and a cloud of cigar smoke. "The Sopranos" is considered by some (including me) to be the greatest TV show in history, and it's Gandolfini's performance that catapults it into that upper echelon.

While it was difficult for some to shake the image of Tony once the show ended, Gandolfini recently delivered a stirring performance in "Zero Dark Thirty" and even gave fans a taste of his soulful side in the movie adaptation of "Where the Wild Things Are."

James Gandolfini starred as mob boss Tony Soprano in "The Sopranos."

In an industry where plenty of actors phone in performances to cash a paycheck, Gandolfini was of the rarest breed. He took on roles that challenged him as an actor and was diligent in preparing for them.

He had a reputation of being difficult to work with, especially on the set of "The Sopranos," where creator David Chase said he would give Gandolfini 20-30 pages of dialogue a night to memorize. In turn, he memorized his way to three Emmys.

Gandolfini's early death—he was only 51—eventually will be considered one of American cinema's greatest travesties.

Rest in peace, T.

Police investigate an accident Thursday morning in Gresham. Seven people were injured, including three children, in a crash involving a police car and two SUVs near 76th and Halsted streets. Officers were in pursuit of a suspect who had fired a gun from a vehicle, authorities said. None of the injuries was believed to be life-threatening. ERIC CLARK/PHOTO FOR TRIBUNE

Jury rejects sex-slave claim

Chicago Tribune

A federal jury sided Thursday evening with an ex-husband who was accused of forcing his wife to be a sex slave, deciding not to award the woman any monetary damages after an unusual trial that included lurid photos and detailed accounts of the couple's sadomasochistic role-playing.

Sitting at the plaintiff's table with her hands clenched tightly in her lap, Kimberley O'Brien, 52, stared straight ahead and pursed her lips as the jury of four men and four women announced its decision after about 4 1/2 hours of deliberation. Her ex-husband, Kenneth Anderson, had attended the entire nine-day trial but went back home to Wisconsin after closing arguments ended early in the afternoon and was not present for the verdict.

O'Brien's lawsuit—filed seven years ago—alleged Anderson, a wealthy businessman, forced her to parade around their homes naked and in heels, sleep on the floor next to their bed at night and address him as "master."

According to the lawsuit, Anderson stunned O'Brien with a blow to the head on their California honeymoon in 2005, tied her up, sexually assaulted her, took photographs and left her bound overnight. The suit also alleged Anderson forced her to abort their child before he would agree to marry her.

In closing arguments Thursday, O'Brien's attorneys said Anderson had manipulated his vulnerable wife for years, building her up and tearing her down until she was so emotionally scarred he was able to inflict his sick sexual fantasies on her at his whim.

Kimberley O'Brien left the Dirksen U.S. Courthouse without comment Thursday. Her lawyer, Dean Dickie, said the years of litigation left her "fragile." "We're disappointed with the verdict," he said. "This has been a very difficult ordeal for her."

"Mr. Anderson is a predator," attorney Robert Levels said. "He has no regard for women; he has no compunction, no conscience and no honor."

Anderson's attorneys, meanwhile, painted a picture of O'Brien as an unstable "gold digger" who initiated the kinky sex herself and schemed to take her husband's money.

French filmmaker to film Pride doc

By Tony Peregrin

FOR REDEYE

LGBT people and their straight allies will have even more reason to celebrate during Chicago Gay Pride this year as the festivities are being filmed for a 52-minute documentary that will air on France's M6—one of the top three TV networks in the country.

"I was really impressed with how many people attended your Pride parade last year—800,000. When I heard that number, I was really impressed," said Aurore Belser, 32, a journalist and producer of the untitled documentary.

"I've seen video of your past parades on YouTube, but that didn't really give me an idea of what it was like, so I had to come here and see [for myself] and film it."

Belser and her camera will have been in Chicago for a total of three weeks this month, not only capturing the newly expanded Pride festivities—which grew from a weekend to an entire week this year—but also with a digital eye toward the Boystown neighborhood.

"I find it interesting that Boystown is the first nationally recognized LGBT neighborhood in the U.S.," Belser said. "The same-sex marriage law in France passed recently, which was a very big issue in my country and obviously continues to be a big issue now. I think it will be interesting [for French viewers] to see the story of Boystown—which is a mix of gay and straight people—and understand how it all works.

"This is a very nice area, almost like a village, and if I am understanding it correctly, that is in large part thanks to the LGBT community."

Working in tandem with the Northalsted Business Alliance, Belser plans to film both the everyday lives of Boystown residents as well as offer a rare, behind-the-scenes view of the business owners, community leaders and nightlife personalities that make Boystown the gay ground zero of the Midwest. She plans to shadow Ramesh Ariyanayakam, owner of Kit Kat Lounge & Supper Club, and Sean Kotwa, general manager of Hydrate, in their roles as co-chairs of Pride Fest. She's also hoping to interview Ald. Tom Tunney (44th), according to Jen Gordon, spokesperson for the Northalsted Business Alliance.

Belser said she's particularly excited to film the drag queen superstars, including performers at Kit Kat Club and Hydrate.

"In Paris, there are not so many shows," Belser said. "There are some clubs, with DJs and drinking and so on—but not so many drag revues or special parties. It's not as [common] as it is here."

Massive anti-Islamist protests planned

2 President Mohammed Morsi's appointment this week of eight Islamist governors has sparked a fresh wave of anger against him ahead of what are expected to be massive anti-government protests June 30. Mobster's trial takes emotional, chilly turn

3 After three days of chillingly subdued testimony by former associate John "The Executioner" Martorano, who duly recounted a dozen murders he committed that he said involved accused Boston mob boss James "Whitey" Bulger, the trial took a more emotional turn Thursday as the survivors of those named by prosecutors as Bulger's victims appeared tearfully on the stand.

'Conversion therapy' group shuts down, apologizes

5 IRVINE, Calif. A Christian group that once promoted therapy to encourage gays and lesbians to overcome their sexual preferences has closed its doors and apologized to those who underwent treatment, acknowledging its mission had been hurtful and ignorant.

Exodus International billed itself as the oldest and largest Christian ministry dealing with faith and homosexuality, operating since 1976.

The group's board unanimously voted to cease operations and begin a separate ministry, Exodus International said in a statement on its website Wednesday.

"We have made a number of mistakes with how we treated people, based on our beliefs," President Alan Chambers told Reuters on Thursday. "I recognize that our beliefs have to change, but I'd never distance myself from the church."

Chambers declined to estimate how many people underwent therapy, saying it was impossible to calculate because it was practiced by some 260 Exodus International-affiliated ministries across North America.

"I am sorry for the pain and hurt that many of you have experienced," Chambers said in the statement. "I am sorry some of you spent years working through the shame and guilt when your attractions didn't change. I am sorry we promoted sexual orientation change efforts and reparative theories about sexual orientation that stigmatized parents."

Chambers said he was part of a "system of ignorance."

Exodus International has closed at a time of shifting attitudes in the U.S., with public opinion polls now tilting in favor of same-sex marriage.

Twelve states and the District of Columbia have legalized same-sex marriage.

All-woman jury set for Zimmerman trial

7 SANFORD, Fla. A jury has been seated and sworn for the second-degree murder trial of George Zimmerman in the shooting death of 17-year-old Trayvon

Martin, after more than a week of intensive jury selection in the high-profile case.

The lawyers have selected 10 Seminole County residents—six jurors and four alternates—to serve as jurors for a trial which is expected to last two to four weeks, and is sure to be closely watched across the nation.

All six of the jurors selected are women, and five are white. The alternates consist of two women and two men. The jurors will be back in court Monday for opening statements.

Prosecutors say Zimmerman profiled, pursued and killed Martin, who was unarmed, on Feb. 26, 2012, in Sanford. Zimmerman says he fired in self-defense after he was attacked by Martin, a high school junior from Miami Gardens.

Patrick Kane has still got that boyish grin—he just isn't a kid anymore

By Leonor Vivanco

REDEYE

In three short years, Patrick Kane has grown up.

Before lifting the Stanley Cup in 2010 at age 21, he talked to RedEye about how he liked to play himself in a video game and how he was still adjusting to superstardom in Chicago, where athletes are mega-celebrities.

Fans saw the boyish grin he flashed when he celebrated that game-winning goal against Philadelphia in overtime to crown the Hawks champions.

Fast-forward three years and he still has the same boyish grin. Chicago witnessed it again when he smacked the puck into the net in double overtime against Los Angeles to clinch the Western Conference finals.

But will fans see it during the Stanley Cup Final against Boston? When he scored Wednesday, he was mic'd up and heard yelling, "Whoa, baby! That's how we play the game!"

Even though Kane says he feels like the same kid at heart, the Lady Byng Memorial Trophy finalist seemingly has taken his skills to another level.

"A lot of us that were here in 2010 could say that we're probably better players now," he said. "I, myself, feel that I'm a well-rounded player. I got a lot better defensively without the puck. As time has gone on, I feel like I'm more focused about hockey now."

That may very well be. In years past, his off-ice exploits have been fodder for blogs and pundits. But this year has been quiet away from the ice. In an interview with NHL posted online last week, Kane acknowledges his partying reputation.

"I think some people might look at me and look from a reputation standpoint that maybe I like to have a little bit too much fun," he said in the video. "But I think at the same time, I think I prepare pretty well to play the game of hockey."

Duncan Keith said his teammate is misunderstood.

"Every guy likes to go out and have fun, especially when you're a young guy," Keith said.

"He's no different. Sometimes, it just kind of got caught on camera, pictures, things like that."

"I think now he's got a girlfriend. You can tell, he's 24, turning 25. He's not 18 or 19 anymore," Keith said, adding that it's fun to watch both Kane and captain Jonathan Toews grow up. "They're starting to stay in on a Friday night, watch a movie instead."

Before the Hawks won the Cup, Kane said he expected to see someone he knew when he heard his name called. Now, he tries to wander around Chicago incognito.

"It's funny. Whether it's just walking down the street to try to go to a movie or go to dinner or something like that, there's always a few people that recognize you," Kane said. "You kind of learn to wear the hat down low by your eyes, keep the head down and keep walking."

"There's great fans in Chicago. I think you'd rather have them recognize you than not recognize you. Just to show how great of a hockey city it is, that's how excited they are now."

In a shortened 2013 regular season, Kane scored just as many goals as he did all of last season (23). He has seven goals in these playoffs, including including his hat trick in Game 5 of the Western Conference finals.

JUNE 8, 2013

Tallies a hat trick, including the winning goal in overtime, against Los Angeles to clinch Western Conference title.

"He's matured, yeah," Toews said. "He's matured a lot. He wants to keep getting better and better. He wants to contribute. He wants to be the go-to guy all the time."

This year, Kane continues to prove how well he handles pressure with three game-winning goals in the regular season and one in the playoffs. But it's tough to compare his two iconic goals of his career so far: the one against Los Angeles to clinch the West title this year and the one to win the Cup in 2010.

"[The goal against the Kings is] a moment that I'll never forget obviously," Kane said. "And it was one of the greatest moments of my career, I thought, maybe besides the Stanley Cup winner in 2010."

"But I don't think anything is going to beat scoring the game winner in 2010 unless I do it this year too."

And if he does, fans can bet on seeing that boyish grin again.

We picked the best answers from our social media followers. It's that simple. What are you waiting for?

1	Make a prediction for Game 5 of the Stanley Cup Final.	Bruins (bears) are slow and heavy. The OTs will catch up to them. They will become Hawk prey.	Five will go west.	Contrary to Game 4, Corey Crawford will elect to use a glove.	Win or lose, overtime.	@angelato3 A unicorn will come to the madhouse before the Hawks make a power play goal
2	How did the Hawks finally ignite their offense?	The team will come to the Laugh Factory. Giggles = Goals. Look for a happy hat trick. Hawks 7, Bruins 1.	Overtime was Too much for Rask.	Two words: Unlimited chili.	Looked at footage of the regular season.	@gibby79 The training staff secretly switched their beer from Sam Adams to Goose Island.
3	What would you do with a 650-pound Blackhawks figure made of chocolate?	Melt it down, get the strawberries and fill the Stanley Cup. It's Blackhawk celebration time!	What, no icing?	I'd divide into 26 25-pound pieces and mail it out as a warning to other NHL teams.	Introduce him to my friends. Then, dinner.	@ktgibbles Hell. Melt it down and bathe myself in it. #chocoholic
4	The Chicago Symphony Orchestra performing "Chelsea Dagger" is like...	... Honey Boo Boo painting the Sistine Chapel.	... a better performance than the Bruins had Wednesday.	... Bag Boy performing oral sex.	... the Fratellis playing "Carmen" in four acts.	@CaithynnMM ... nude pictures of Zdeno Chara. Makes people feel awkward and uncomfortable.
5	Alexei Ramirez has played every inning for the Sox so far this season. What's his secret?	Appreciates every day not dealing with a Cuban dictator.	In it to not win it.	He has four identical twins. They are doctors and really good at keeping Alexei healthy.	He may have discovered the benefits of eating meat.	@cokohat Shot of rum, a cigar, and doing a rumba with Tank—not necessarily in that order.

SACKED AGAIN

Bag Boy

redeyesports@tribune.com

OK, enough with the overtime games.

I've complained about this to no end, but now I really mean it. I've aged, like, five years in the past week. And please, I wasn't young to begin with. I went from, you know, a touch of salt and pepper, to something a bit closer to ... Bob Barker.

OK, looks aside, my biggest problem is of course Game 4. It's one thing to get beat by a physical team, to lose against Tuukka Rask. It's quite another to lose because of two goals by Patrice Bergeron. That's not Patrick. Patrick, I can handle. No, his name is Patrice.

Hey, I'm glad the Blackhawks at least woke up. After sleepwalking through Game 3, I seriously wondered if they'd show for Game 4.

They did, but you know, I still get the feeling, and it starts in the back of my throat and ends in my stomach, that Boston simply is the bigger, quicker, more physical team. It haunts me, in fact.

Is it me or do our players look like they're 18-year-old kids, and theirs look like 30-year-old men?

Maybe because that's actually what I'm seeing.

Anyway, I do feel obligated to get you updated on the normal stuff, so you're informed when you return to everyday life.

Both Chicago baseball teams are on pace to lose—brace yourselves—90 games this season.

That's not a misprint. Amazingly so, White Sox GM Rick Hahn says he isn't ready to give up on the season.

Dear Rick,
We have. Thanks.
—Bag Boy

And why shouldn't we? Poor defense, no power, no punch, aging players, decent young pitching (but it isn't enough). And by the way, when it is time to officially give up, what does Hahn offer?

Rival GM: Rick, what ya got?

Hahn: Um, Paul Konerko? Jesse Crain? Adam Dunn?

Rival GM: I'll call you back. (That's the last time they ever speak).

As for the Cubs, it's time to pay Carlos Marmol—to play for someone else.

That bad? Of course.

We close on football. The Bears have hired a “director of analytics” from Stats Inc.

Mitch Tanney is his name. And yes, Jonah Hill plays him in the football version of “Moneyball.”

Hawks win—in ticket prices

The average resale price for tickets to Saturday's Game 5 of the Stanley Cup Final in Chicago is higher than that of NBA Finals Game 7, according to ticket marketplace aggregator SeatGeek.com. Crain's Chicago Business reports that tickets to Thursday's Miami-San Antonio game averaged $1,017 apiece across the top online resale sites, while Saturday's Game 5 is averaging $1,044 per ticket.

That's how many scoreless relief appearances pitcher Jesse Crain has strung together, a White Sox record. The streak encompasses 28 innings.

Heat make it a double

Although they needed Game 7 in their last two series, the Miami Heat lived up to the hype, winning their second straight NBA championship with a 95-88 win over the San Antonio Spurs on Thursday at American Airlines Arena. The Heat's win was made possible in part by the perimeter scoring of LeBron James (37 points, 12 rebounds), Dwyane Wade (23 points) and Shane Battier (18 points on 6-of-7 3-point shooting).

Centro
REDEYE PHOTOS

Centro

6 W. Hubbard St. 312-988-7775

Italian roots: Centro is a reboot of the popular 1990s eatery of the same name from Rosebud Restaurants. If your parents dined at the original 710 N. Wells St. location back in the day, they might recognize some of the Southern Italian dishes and decor, including signed pics of Marlon Brando and other classic celebs.

Most authentic: The Eight Finger Cavatelli takes its name from its preparation, meaning it takes eight fingers to roll Centro's homemade dough into long, dumpling-shaped pasta, which is served with your choice of sauce ($21). Chef Joe Farina recommends topping it with his rich tomato-vodka sauce, made with mascarpone cheese and

Shrimp Milanese
with Lobster
Coleslaw

Absolut. "Everything's served in large stainless steel pans that are great for sharing," Farina says. "We encourage family-style."

Least authentic: Centro's menu focuses on traditional Italian fare, but the shrimp milanese ($28) comes with an unusual extra: lobster coleslaw. This side dish made with coldwater Australian lobster tails is more inspired by summer than Southern Italy.

Steals: Centro's meatballs are a hefty eight ounces each, served in marinara with whipped ricotta on the side ($14 for two).

Splurge-worthy: The 48-ounce prime T-bone ($98) feeds two to five people, making it just right to share with pals who have big appetites—and wallets.

Get your Italian fix at three new downtown restaurants serving pasta, pizza and more

By Erin Brereton | FOR REDEYE

If you thought River North was at capacity for Italian restaurants with the openings of Siena Tavern from "Top Chef" fan favorite Fabio Viviani and Bill and Giuliana Rancic's RPM Italian, think again. The recent debut of Centro and J. Rocco's Italian Table & Bar proves that this bustling neighborhood isn't yet at capacity for marinara and meatballs. With another option, Tre Soldi, set to debut in Streeterville this weekend, it's getting even easier to nab a taste of Italy without leaving downtown. Here's the lowdown on the latest.

Eight Finger Cavatelli with vodka sauce at Centro

Tre Soldi

212 E. Ohio St. 312-664-0212

Italian roots: Set to open this weekend, this Streeterville eatery from Coco Pazzo owner Jack Weiss will serve dishes inspired by Italy's capital, Rome. "We're calling it a 'trattoria-pizzeria,'" said chef Brandon Wolff, who previously worked at River North Italian eateries Osteria Via Stato and La Madia.

Most authentic: The crispy, thin-crust Roman-style pizzas. Look for a white pie made with pecorino, sausage, potatoes and rosemary (around $14).

Least authentic: Wolff wants to keep the menu as Italian as possible while using locally grown Midwestern ingredients, rather than cheese or meats shipped in from Europe. "For example, we found a sheep's milk ricotta-style cheese made in Wisconsin that we're going to use for pasta fillings," he said. Steals: Pastas, which will be in the $12-$16 range. "We're trying to keep the price point at under $30," Wolff says. "This restaurant is a trattoria, which in Italy is a more casual restaurant."

Bucatini alla amatriciana

Splurge-worthy: The menu will include roasted seabream stuffed with fennel and lemon and a mix of daily seafood selections such as clams and monkfish ($28-$30). Combined with tomatoes, herbs and fish stock, the whole deal is steamed inside parchment paper with tomatoes, which a server will slice open at your table ($25-$26).

Raviolini at J. Rocco

J. Rocco Italian Table & Bar

749 N. Clark St. 312-475-0271

Italian roots: Chef Steve Chiappetti's family hails from Calabria, the tip of Italy's boot, and he returns to visit every few years. His roots in the Chicago restaurant scene are just as deep, having worked at both Rhapsody and Vland; in the 1990s, he owned Mango, located just a block from where J. Rocco is now.

Most authentic: "All the pastas," Chiappetti said. "[Calabria] is the biggest area surrounded by coastal sea, so we also have a lot of seafood and meat dishes." The raviolini ($14), made with spicy Italian sausage, is a regional favorite, and J. Rocco also serves seven Italian microbrews. Chiappetti's favorite is the Demon Hunter ale ($11) from Birilicio Montegioco, which has notes of coriander and, at more than 8 percent alcohol, is almost like having two beers. Also on tap, look for Birilicio del Ducato's Verdi Imperial stout ($11), which Chiappetti said features chocolate and chili flavors.

Least authentic: Everything on the menu has a strong Italian influence, Chiappetti said; however, he borrowed some favorites from his previous restaurants, including onion-crusted sturgeon with brown butter-sage sauce ($24), a signature dish at Rhapsody in the late '90s. Steals: For the $21 price tag, the cioppino features an impressive array of halibut, scallops or other catch-of-the-day picks, braised and served in a saffron, fennel and tomato broth.

Splurge-worthy: Grilled sirloin steak marinated with rosemary and garlic is one of the most expensive items at $24. For a splurge in the calorie department, the mezza luna ($15), a plate full of four-cheese ravioli with truffle cream sauce, should do the trick.

5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KEEP ON YOUR RADAR

Wafel 217 N. Clinton St. 773-770-4894

If the weekend brunch scene feels like a bit too much this weekend, stop in this West Loop waffle shop to jump-start your day with a waffle breakfast sandwich and a latte made with espresso from nearby small-batch coffee roaster Sparrow Coffee Roastery.

Lao 18

18 W. Hubbard St. 312-955-8018

If chef Tony Hu's multiple Chinatown eateries—Lao Sze Chuan, Lao Beijing, Lao Hunan, Lao Shanghai, to name a few—and their multi-page menus of regional specialties intimidated you in the past, here's your chance to try his fare all wrapped up in a shiny new package in River North.

Gallery Bar

738 N. Clark St., 2nd floor 312-929-2658

Taking its inspiration from street art as well as Andy Warhol's studio The Factory, this River North bar-meets-art-gallery celebrates its grand opening at 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday with a menu of beer cocktails, sharing plates and party beats from DJ Justin Anderson. Don't forget to look up from your drink—all the art on display is for sale.

Parsons Chicken & Fish

2952 W. Armitage Ave. 773-384-3333

Early buzz on this hip Humboldt Park spot was all about the patio and the fried chicken, but it's the Negroni slushy that's lately been stealing the spotlight. If your group is really thirsty, may we suggest ordering it by the carafe?

Restaurant Beatrix

519 N. Clark St. 312-284-1377

This new entry from Lettuce Entertain You Restaurants inside just-opened River North hotel Aloft serves breakfast, lunch and dinner, but based on the tasty photos of cinnamon rolls, croissants and lattes populating its Facebook page, it stands to serve hungry commuters making pre-work stops as well.

FEST FRIDAYS

Green Music Fest
CHUAN VO/REDEYE FILE PHOTOS

GREEN MUSIC FEST

Where: Damen Avenue between North Avenue and Schiller Street

When: Noon-10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

How much: $5 suggested donation

Don't miss: Three stages keep the music going all weekend with performances by Atlanta indie rockers Manchester Orchestra (8:45 p.m. Saturday), former Chicagoan and singer-songwriter Joe Pug (7:30 p.m. Sunday), SoCal rockers Everest (7:30 p.m. Saturday) and others. The environmental focus is more participatory than preachy, with chances for fest-goers to win Divvy bike-sharing passes, stretch out during free vinyasa yoga classes (1 p.m. both days) and sip beers from eco-conscious Colorado brewery New Belgium.

Mini-detours: Keep the earthy vibe going with brunch at Birchwood Kitchen (2211 North Ave.), a bright, cozy cafe with a focus on local and seasonal ingredients. Vegetarians can check out the mushroom tacos at Antique Taco (1360 N. Milwaukee Ave.) or the totally meat-free menu at Native Foods Cafe (1484 N. Milwaukee Ave.).

Green Music Fest

Bust out your neon! Pride Fest, Chicago Craft Beer Fest and Green Music Fest rock the weekend

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

This weekend is pretty much the quintessential snapshot of Chicago summer fests: You've got the rainbows, neon and barely-clothed partiers of Pride Fest, the jams of Green Music Fest and the, well, beer of Chicago Craft Beer Fest. New this year is the separation of Pride Fest (June 22-23) and the Pride Parade (June 30), so remember that Halsted Street won't welcome the carnival of floats until next weekend. Now rally your friends and hit the streets—and don't forget to take some photos to remember it all.

Pride Fest
BROCK BRAKE/REDEYE FILE

CHICAGO CRAFT BEER FEST

Where: St. Michael, 1633 N. Cleveland Ave.

When: 5-10 p.m. Friday, 1-10 p.m. Saturday, 1-9 p.m. Sunday

How much: $5 suggested donation, plus beer package options ($35-$50); beers also will be available for individual purchase

Don't miss: Forty-plus breweries will keep a steady stream of liquid sunshine flowing all weekend; I would bee-line for the brews from Kansas City, Mo.'s Boulevard Brewing Co., Wisconsin's Central Waters Brewing Company and Perennial Artisan Ales from St. Louis. Music from singer-songwriter Tyrone Wells (8 p.m. Friday), blues pianist Marcia Ball (8:30 p.m. Saturday) and alt-country singer Robbie Fulks (5 p.m. Sunday) also is on deck.

Mini-detours: All that beer drinking inevitably will lead to some snacking, so head to Old Town Pour House (1419 N. Wells St.) for bar food and burgers, or to La Fournette (1547 N. Wells St.) for some of the best French-style bread (plus crepes and sandwiches) in the city.

PRIDE FEST

Where: Halsted Street between Grace and Addison streets

When: Noon-10 p.m. Saturday; noon-9 p.m. Sunday

How much: $8 suggested donation

Don't miss: One week before the Pride Parade, this celebration of Chicago's gay and lesbian communities takes over Boystown with plenty of food, drinks, arts and crafts and high-energy performances. Two stages will host entertainers such as Jessica Sutta of the Pussycat Dolls (4:30 Saturday), Blu Cantrell (6:30 Saturday) and drag shows throughout the day Saturday. Of course, the outfits and all-day partying of Pride Fest always are their own show.

Mini-detours: If it's been a while since you've visited Boystown, check out some of the new faces on the main strip: Replay (3439 N. Halsted St.), an arcade and beer bar, has taken over the former Bucks Saloon while Sidetrack's MainBar (3349 N. Halsted St.) has undergone a facelift. Got the late-night munchies? Grab some to-go Belgian-style frites from Backwoods (3335 N. Halsted St., enter on Buckingham Place) beginning at 10 p.m.

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

lgomez@tribune.com
@aboutluisgomez

Plain White T's lead singer and Villa Park native Tom Higgenson was in the process Monday of putting together the all-important guest list for his band's Saturday concert at Lincoln Park Zoo. He wanted to avoid the hassle of having to make last-minute arrangements the day of the show, as is often the case when the band plays in the Chicago area. So who made the cut? Friends and family, of course, and also the guy who recently installed the carpet at Higgenson's parents' home.

Only at a hometown show.

"My parents were haggling with the guy to get the price down," Higgenson said over the phone from his home in Elmhurst on Monday, "and he said 'I'll tell you what: Your son is playing at the zoo. I'll cut off $200 from the price if you get me tickets to the show.' So now the carpet guy is on the guest list."

The show, part of Lincoln Park Zoo's Jammin' at the Zoo concert series, will be the band's first in Chicago since a Halloween weekend performance at the House of Blues in 2011. Higgenson said playing in front of loved ones and the fans who were there long before "Hey There Delilah" was No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100 in 2007 is the best part about performing in the city.

The Santa Barbara, Calif.-raised Tim Lopez, who recently co-starred on the NBC reality show, "Ready for Love," is the only member of the quintet who grew up outside the Chicago area.

Plain White T's have played a few shows here and there the last few months but will soon head out on an official tour in mid-July. Because the band members have spent the majority of the year recording their upcoming album—which Higgenson expects to hit stores either late summer or early fall—the road life will be a welcome change of pace.

"It's been so long that we're really excited,"

Higgenson said. "It also helps that we have a new record coming out, so we have new songs to play. It's always a cool cycle. When you get burned out from touring, then you get to chill at home and write and record. And by the time you're done with that, you're ready to go back on tour."

Higgenson will be sharing singing and songwriting duties with Lopez on the album even more than he did on 2010's "Wonders of the Younger," which featured Lopez singing the single "Rhythm of Love." Plain White T's fans got a taste of what they can expect from the new album on the band's four-song EP, "Should've Gone to Bed," which was released in April and is split down the middle with Higgenson- and Lopez-sung tunes.

The EP's single, "Should've Gone to Bed," is written and performed by Higgenson and revolves around the not-uncommon habit of texting an ex while intoxicated late at night (hence the second-guessing in the song's title).

Higgenson said he is guilty of sending more than a few of these kinds of texts and is glad to hear others can relate to his lyrics.

OTHER TOP SHOWS Manchester Orchestra

10 p.m. Fri. at Subterranean (Sold out), 8:45 p.m. Sat. at Green Music Fest. $5 donation.

An extraordinary live band. Andy Hull's voice will ring in your ears for days.

John Reilly and Friends

8 p.m. Sat. at Old Town School of Folk Music. $26-$28.

The South Side native takes music seriously. So stop laughing!

Speaking of Higgenson's love life, he is single—unlike Lopez, who is dating the contestant he met on "Ready for Love"—and would like to meet someone. Does going on tour help or hurt his chances of that happening any time soon?

"It's difficult to say," Higgenson said. "But I'll have fun along the way, maybe have a few lucky nights and maybe a few 'Should've Gone to Bed' nights."

Pitchfork 2013 lineup causes conflicts

R. Kelly
GETTY IMAGES FILE

By Matt Pais and Ernest Wilkins

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

The lineup for the July 19-21 Pitchfork Music Festival is the best it's been in a long time, which comes at a cost: the inevitable scheduling conflicts. Here are the four biggest question marks posed by the Pitchfork schedule, announced Thursday:

Friday

Frankie Rose (3:20 p.m., Blue stage) vs. Daughn Gibson (3:30 p.m., Red stage)

Do you want to begin your fest with something light and airy or a moody baritone? It's totally a matter of preference, and you really can't go wrong.—MP

Saturday

Savages (4:15 p.m., Green stage) vs. Metz (4:45 p.m., Blue stage)

The English band's '80s-leaning debut "Silence Yourself" has made them one of the buzziest groups of the year. Enjoy them for a while, then take off; you shouldn't miss a second of the hard-rocking Canadians, whose razor-sharp guitars are savage in their own right.—MP

Sunday

Tree (1 p.m., Green stage) vs. DJ Rashad (1 p.m., Blue stage)

Why you gotta put the two local openers on against each other, Pitchfork? What, we can't enjoy a legendary juke DJ working the crowd of Hold Steady AND a fascinating performance from one of the better rappers in Chicago's new scene? We have to choose? I'm just saying—it's a conspiracy or something.—EW

R. Kelly (8:30 p.m., Green stage) vs. TNGHT (8:45 p.m., Blue stage)

The advantage would clearly lean toward the Pied Piper of R&B, right? Don't sleep on Hudson Mohawke and Lunice, however; expect hardcore beats and, since they'll be coming off of their work on Kanye West's recent "Yeezus" record, could we see some local appearances? Time will tell.—EW

CHIEF THIEF

THE 'BLING RING' BADDIE IS STRAIGHT OUTTA WINNETKA

By Matt Pals | REDEYE

Katie Chang makes a disclaimer: She's about to use a reference that reveals her youth.

"I feel like I'm Hannah Montana," says the 18-year-old Winnetka native and star of Sofia Coppola's "The Bling Ring," opening Friday. "It feels like I'm living two different worlds, especially when I was in school, too. One weekend I flew to L.A. with my mom and my best friend and we went to the MTV Movie Awards, and then on Monday I had a math test."

The recent New Trier grad and veteran of Wilmette Theatre's Actors Training Center has reason to be confused. In the last month, she's promoted her first movie—which she shot when she was 16—at the Cannes Film Festival in France, where she felt like she was on "Entourage," and has gone on a map-jumping press tour, where constant chatter and changing weather have all but eliminated her voice. This summer, though, she may be working as a clerk in her friend's dad's law firm, and she'll head to Columbia University in the fall with plans to study creative writing.

Is Katie Chang a movie star, or an ordinary (and very intelligent) Chicago teenager?

In "The Bling Ring," she's Rebecca, the leader of a group of L.A. teens who break into the houses of celebs such as Paris Hilton and Audrina Patridge and help themselves to whatever fashionable souvenirs they like. Based on a true story, the film actually shot in Hilton's house to re-enact that particular burglary.

On the outdoor patio at NoMi, Chang talked about researching the L.A. lifestyle, being forbidden to watch "The Simple Life" and celeb fixation in the Chicago suburbs.

For "Bling Ring" research, you watched "The Hills" and "Keeping up with the Kardashians." What stood out there and was useful for the character?

Well, definitely at the beginning, the accent [laughs] because I'm from Chicago.

If you could hang out with any of those people, would you want to?

I would totally hang out with Lauren Conrad! [Laughs.]

Why her?

'Cause I watched "Laguna Beach" before I watched "The Hills." 'Cause I'm like a nerd and I needed to have backstory, so I watched all of "Laguna Beach" and all of "The Hills," too.

Yes. For backstory.

Yeah! I wanted to know where she came from. And I'm obsessed with "Laguna Beach" now. So I would totally hang out with her. She would not want to meet me though.

You previously talked about seeing versions of the kids in "The Bling Ring" growing up in Winnetka. How can you tell when a classmate, friend or otherwise has a celeb fixation like the girls in the film?

After having done the movie ... I had a month left of school when I got home, and reintegrating and going back to classes and taking all the tests and being with my peers again, I found it was really shocking just the questions that I was asked. Because if I knew someone who had gone off and done a Sofia Coppola film, I would have been like, "Did you meet Francis Ford? Did you get to meet Harris Savides, her cinematographer? What was Sofia like?" Instead, the most common questions that I got were like, "Is Paris Hilton mean? What is Emma Watson like?"

Not, "What's Paris Hilton like?" Just, "Is she mean?"

No. "Is she mean? Is she an idiot?" No, she's nice, and she's incredibly intelligent. "What's Emma Watson like? Are you guys best friends now?"

How did you answer stuff like that?

I would just smile and—what's that movie? It's in "Madagascar" when the penguins go, "Smile and wave." That's what my mom told me to do. I was really freaked out about going home. She goes, "Just smile and wave." I tried to be gracious, but at the same time I don't think you can know how invasive and obsessive they can come off as. So those questions were really difficult to deal with.

The cast participated in a mock-robbery, your first chance at being the ringleader. How did you fare?

I think I was a little nervous. I got an email from our production assistant Katie and she was like, "Here are the directions. Here's the list of stuff. Figure out how to get there. Good luck." And I was really nervous, but I think I did OK. I was really bossy: I was like, "You guys! You have to get this together! Stop laughing; stop being goofy!" Which you don't really see much of in the movie. I had to tone it down a little bit, my bossiness.

Was there something that surprised you because you couldn't believe you acted that way?

I remember seeing a bag and thinking, like saying out loud, "Oh my God, that's so cute." [Laughs.] And then I stopped myself and I was like, "No, Katie, ground yourself, no!" ... When we were breaking in, there was a bag that was hanging that wasn't on our list, and I was like, "I want that!"

'The Bling Ring'

Trapped in closet

FAST PAISED

Part of the triumph of "Spring Breakers," the current, unexpected holder of the title "best movie of the year so far," was its lack of judgment. Its characters engaged in all kinds of over-the-top behavior, but writer-director Harmony Korine never seemed to scold, "Shame on these girls, on society and on you for watching!"

With the shallow "The Bling Ring," writer-director Sofia Coppola often sneers at how obnoxious her characters are, and her sarcasm makes the subjects too easy to dismiss. When the movie is funny, it's mega-ironic, underlined and in capital letters. Nicki (Emma Watson), for example, acts as if she cares about humanitarian causes but archly and transparently can't distinguish one African country from another. With an emphasis on the "As If."

The movie is based on the true story of a glamorous group of L.A.-area teenagers who treat the world, and specifically the houses of Hollywood and society's elite, as their own personal closet. It's a hell of a headline, but ultimately not much of a movie. Coppola perpetuates vapidty instead of processing it.

"Let's go shopping," utters Rebecca (breakout Katie Chang of Winnetka) as she leads her crew through an unlocked sliding door and into an astonishing collection of shoes/purses/hats/cash. They're owned by paparazzi fodder whom Rebecca and her friends assume won't notice or care about a few missing items. The thieves make no distinction between robbing Megan Fox or Rachel Bilson or Paris Hilton or Orlando Bloom and Miranda Kerr.

The point, with a particular dream of hitting the casa de Lohan, is to literally steal the style of the rich and famous. On screen, it looks more like killing your idols (hence the use of Sleigh Bells' "Crown on the Ground") than honoring them, though Rebecca does seek to attend the Fashion Institute of Design because it's where "The Hills" girls went.

Some may find "The Bling Ring" fascinating (fashionating?) in an, "Oh, no they di-in't" way. The problem is Coppola, who unraveled Hollywood detachment far better with "Somewhere," but here doesn't break through the glitz to a new level of understanding about image and celebrity. The characters have almost no trajectory, and the filmmaker's cultural analysis involves characters bluntly depicting their cluelessness, such as when the gals sing to M.I.A.'s "Bad Girls."

They also speculate broadly about motive, such as when Marc (Israel Broussard) claims that Rebecca merely wants the lifestyle that everyone wants. Nicki's mom (Leslie Mann), whom Coppola looks down upon whenever possible, asks her kids to model themselves after a good example like Angelina Jolie, but the girls only make note of the star's fiance and "hot bod."

Chang subtly embodies the confidence of a girl who makes others feel special just by paying attention to them. There's clearly merit in questioning how the drooling, fashion-focused entertainment media encourages young celebutantes-in-training to envy social status and selfishly shrug off the DUIs that their idols seem to treat so cavalierly. Yet that requires a curious, objective examination into that world, not a sneering portrait that sacrifices analysis for eye rolls.

Remember how you felt watching "The Incredibles" or "Ratatouille" or, most recently in the Pixar canon, "Toy Story 3"? Those movies are funny and moving.

You delight in their universe and are sad to leave.

Now, for the third consecutive year (following "Cars 2" and "Brave"), Pixar phones it in with "Monsters University," the, uh, long-awaited prequel to 2001's cute "Monsters Inc." Answering the much-discussed question, "Where did Sully and Mike do undergraduate work before their scaring career?" "MU" returns to the days when Mike (Billy Crystal) still had a retainer and Sully (John Goodman) was an arrogant slacker planning to coast through scaring school on his father's legacy. No dice! Like something out of "Revenge of the Nerds"—in fact, exactly like that—Mike and Sully wind up joining forces with the university's geekiest fraternity to battle the cool kids in the Scare Games, a competition that will determine their fate at the school.

Despite its shocking lack of originality, the gorgeously animated "MU" has its moments. In fact, after the affecting opening in which adolescent, friendless Mike gets his first glimpse of celeb scarers at Monsters Inc., I wrote "totally unnecessary but totally charming" in my notes, hoping that description would apply. The movie mostly is just unnecessary, involving some forgettable supporting assistants and foes and, of course, a cold-hearted dean with a British accent (voiced by Helen Mirren).

Although it has the typical follow-your-dreams-and-be-proud-of-yourself narrative, "Monsters University" scores points with Mike's honorable determination and need to reconcile ambition with reality. (The film, fortunately, is nowhere near as corny as Martin Lawrence and Raven-Symone's "College Road Trip.") Mike really wants to be a scarer, despite looking like Gumby lost a glass eye because it walked away. Once upon a time, this would have allowed Pixar to tickle its imagination and ours, but "Monsters University" is as dully straightforward as it gets.

I spent much of the movie distracted, which did allow me to realize—and I'm not sure how this didn't occur to me before—that this franchise pairs "Big Lebowski" stars Goodman and Steve Buscemi (as Mike's roommate/future nemesis Randall). Admittedly, that increased my enjoyment of an early moment when Mike's warned not to step over a line; if only it were Sully screaming the warning.

'World War Z'

Nonsense goes viral

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

Here are some things that don't make sense:

» Adapting a book that is all detailed oral history and no thrills into the exact opposite—a film that aims for streamlined excitement and minimal human interest within a planet consumed by zombies.

» Making a zombie horror film restrained enough for a PG-13 rating that relies mostly on faceless, generic CGI oceans of sprinting, screaming monster maniacs—particularly when the book's zombies were slow.

» The entire third act of "World War Z," which, without spoiling, involves characters taking a logical leap and then acting in a way that's not even consistent with their findings. It's like they realize they can survive on a glass of water and insist on busting into a Gatorade factory anyway.

This probably should have been expected. Vanity Fair has a thorough article about the many extensive financial and conceptual problems behind director Marc Forster's adaptation of Max Brooks' 2006 book. In one day two weeks ago, star Brad Pitt made brief appearances at screenings in Chicago, Atlanta, Austin and Philadelphia, probably so people would say after the movie, "I can't believe we saw Brad Pitt in person!" instead of, "We could have re-watched 'Contagion' instead of that mindless drivel."

!!! World War Z

Reportedly costing Paramount somewhere in the neighborhood of $400 million, the needlessly 3-D "World War Z" isn't a total disaster. Pitt's a credible hero, as his ex-UN investigator works to protect his family and save the world while an increasingly large contingent of snarling baddies craves delicious human flesh. Numerous scenes pack the urgency of a civilization in chaos, reduced to panic and instinct.

Yet with confusing action and muddled dialogue, "World War Z" takes a perceptive story about withering global society and makes it about the special treatment one invincible man receives from the government. In a zombie invasion, most people wouldn't be saved by helicopters or survive a terrible plane crash within convenient walking distance from a medical research facility.

The film is summer entertainment too bleak to be fun and too bland to be memorable. It's a product that makes you wish for an escape from all this so-called escapism.

ZOMBIES LIVE ON

Like zombies themselves, the following films have proved to have staying power. MCT

ARMY OF DARKNESS

Aka "Evil Dead III," this comedy shocker was directed by Sam Raimi, who would go on to direct, among other things, the "Spider-Man" trilogy starring Tobey Maguire. It stars cult actor Bruce Campbell, who, as Ash Williams, is trapped in the Middle Ages and has to battle a contingent of corpse-like warriors to return to the present.

28 DAYS LATER

Danny Boyle was a long way from "Slumdog Millionaire" when he directed this popular update on the zombie-virus genre, which revised a few of the tropes (fast zombies, for instance) and created a disturbingly plausible end-of-the-world atmosphere.

RE-ANIMATOR

Extremely gory cult film directed by Stuart Gordon and starring fan fave Jeffrey Combs is based on H.P. Lovecraft's "Herbert West - Reanimator" and chronicles the antics of West (Combs) in bringing the dead back to life. Inspired "Bride of Re-Animator" (1989) and "Beyond Re-Animator" (2003).

THE CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI

1920

German Expressionist masterpiece and one of the more influential films of the silent era, this horror film by Robert Wiene stars Conrad Veidt (of "Casablanca" fame) as the "somnambulist" Cesare, who is kept in a coffin-like box and does the evil bidding of the mysterious doctor of the title. A zombie film for people who don't like zombie films.

NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD

1968

Shot in glorious black and white, George Romero's proto-zombie nightmare (and parable for the Vietnam era) was made for $114,000, but paved the way for an entire cemetery's worth of undead cinema.

Whedon's friends on mission to memorize

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

Their tongues tangled by declarations unbeknownst to them, much of the cast of Joss Whedon's Shakespeare adaptation "Much Ado About Nothing" struggles to suggest they connect to what they're saying.

Well, not everyone—Fran Kranz ("Cabin in the Woods") makes the Bard's words flow, and Nathan Fillion has fun in the role of a hapless detective. Still, working with many of his usual actors (including Fillion, Kranz, Amy Acker and Alexis Denisof), Whedon's extreme post-"Avengers" left turn comes off not as an inspired wink to a classic but a failed experiment among friends.

For those who have forgotten Shakespeare's romantic-comic play or avoided it completely: Claudio (Kranz) instantly falls in love with Hero (striking newcomer Jillian Morgese), but Don John (Sean Maher) and Borachio (Spencer Treat Clark) aim to disrupt the match. Meanwhile, Hero's cousin Beatrice (Acker) may or may not have true feelings for Benedick (Denisof) lingering beneath her coarse outer shell. Though the setting looks like modern-day L.A.—including smartphones and fist bumps—the characters treat their interpersonal conundrums as if they're in 16th century Italy.

Whedon's choice to update the setting but none of the language generates an odd disconnect that makes Shakespeare's use of ridiculous schemes (even the Friar has one!) and sneakily overheard conversations seem contrived. Take out trickery and extreme gullibility and "Much Ado About Nothing" really would have nothing. Whedon, who barely differentiates between characters of vastly different status and gets claustrophobic in limited settings, can't make ado from language that prevents the film from getting off the ground. I much prefer the authenticity and bite of Kenneth Branagh's 1993 adaptation.

I'm all for Shakespeare and endorse Whedon's visions more often than not. This time, the mistaken identity is his own, and the comedy comes off as a joke only some of those involved seem to get.

Nathan Fillion does the Bard

Actor a hit in ABC series and on the big screen

MCT

Nathan Fillion is enjoying the best of two worlds. He's the engaging and sexy star of "Castle," the hit ABC series about a crime novelist who helps the NYPD solve its toughest cases. And he's a cult legend, thanks to his starring role in the 2002 TV series "Firefly," which died a quick death but, thanks to fan pressure, was resurrected as the 2005 film "Serenity."

The 42-year-old Alberta, Canada native also has been a reliable presence in such well-received indie movies as "Slither" and "Waitress." And in "Much Ado About Nothing," director Joss Whedon's contemporary version of the Shakespeare play opening Friday, Fillion is a hoot in the cameo role of Dogberry, a pompous night constable. (Fillion also voices a character in "Monsters University," opening Friday.)

Nathan Fillion stars in "Much Ado About Nothing." GETTY IMAGES

How long has it been since you performed in a Shakespeare play?

I did Shakespeare in high school, and then I did it when we would go to Joss' house for a Shakespeare brunch. He would cast a play, and we would sit in his backyard with a brunch and read Shakespeare, and he said "One day, we're gonna film one of these."

You're a pretty big guy physically, but you seem to have a really light comic touch in most of the things you do. How did you achieve that?

That's something I've learned over the years. It's difficult to make someone laugh, and there's no way to do it without being viewed as you're trying too hard. I've found it's easier to make someone laugh at you. Don't try to be funny, say things as if they're true, even if it makes you look stupid. You don't know you look stupid.

You've just wrapped the fifth season of "Castle" and have been renewed for a sixth. To what do you attribute the show's success?

It's successful because it's a little lighthearted. We do dramatic episodes, but it's the lighter fare that keeps people coming back. We get some great jokes going.

Since you've worked for Whedon in "Buffy," "Firefly" and now "Much Ado," you must know what makes him special. What is it?

He is a man who is incredibly talented, and it's obvious he loves to tell stories. You want a successful project, [then] hand it to Joss and walk away.

After playing too many creatures to count in his film career, Doug Jones has become the maestro of masked acting. So when "Falling Skies" needed someone to embody a new Volm alien, Jones was top of the list for the show's creature creator, Todd Masters of Masters FX.

"This is kind of my M.O. over the years," Jones said during a recent phone conversation from his home in Los Angeles. "Between doing the 'Hellboy' movies in the blue fish guy makeup [Abe Sapien] and being the Silver Surfer in a silver muscle suit and then 'Pan's Labyrinth,' this Oscar-winning, beautiful piece of work where I'm a fawn and a pale man—this is kind of what I do."

Thanks to his old friend Masters alerting him via Facebook, Jones is now playing the pivotal role of Cochise the alien in TNT's "Falling Skies," which airs at 9 p.m. Sundays.

The resistance group 2nd Mass and their leader, Tom Mason (Noah Wyle), still are fighting the Espheni aliens this season, but now they are getting some extraterrestrial help from another alien race, the Volm, who are lead by Cochise. While many in the 2nd Mass are wary of the Volm, Tom, now president of Charleston, has found common ground with Cochise and welcomes his help, Jones explained.

"They're both leaders in their own right, in their own way, in their own worlds. And so they do understand each other," he said. "They both have a huge responsibility on their shoulders. I have to protect my Volm species and he's got to protect his human species. And together we're trying to figure out a way to overcome these horrible Espheni aliens. I come with some technology and some know-how to do that. So I'm rather crucial to these humans."

Doug Jones as Cochise in 'Falling Skies'

"But the question will remain, can Tom truly trust me all the way? He sure seems to, bless his heart."

Ana Ortiz in 'Devious Maids'

Ana Ortiz is gonna get real 'Devious'

Telenovelas have been good to Ana Ortiz.

"My grandmother ... watched them religiously," the actress recalled in a phone interview last week. "I never had much interest in them—you know, like [a] snarky teenager—but now I've grown to appreciate them, and I've had wonderful luck with them."

It was the adaptation of "Yo soy Betty, la fea" that became ABC's "Ugly Betty" and gave Ortiz her big break—a four-year stint as Betty's brash but multifaceted sister, Hilda, that took her well beyond what she once referred to as "sassy sidekick" roles.

Starting 9 p.m. Sunday, Ortiz is out to crack another stereotype as one of the leads in "Devious Maids," Lifetime's new series from "Desperate Housewives" creator Marc Cherry and "Desperate" star Eva Longoria.

Inspired by a Mexican telenovela, "Ellas son ... la alegría del hogar," "Maids," which is set in Beverly Hills, already has sparked controversy for casting its five Latina leads as servants. Of the employers in the Lifetime version, just one is a Latino.

"I understand the backlash, I really do," Ortiz said, "because when I first saw the script, I had the same reaction."

But then she thought about it.

"My grandmother was a housecleaner her whole life," she said. "[Co-star] Judy Reyes' mother was a housekeeper. For me it's an honor to to be able to bring these women to life, and to show that these are fully realized women and characters and they have drama and humor and sex and love. And they're, you know, conniving and they're giving and they're all of that.

"And because they're maids doesn't make their journeys less" worthy, she said.

MODERN INTELLIGENCE FOR A MEAN ECONOMY

WAGE WARS

Fight over minimum pay is as cloudy as ever

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

Jeremiah Green admits it isn't easy to get by on minimum wage.

The 25-year-old South Shore resident works the lunch rush five days a week at a Subway in the Loop. His paycheck, along with money from occasional construction and delivery jobs, goes to help his mother, his sister's children and the mother of his baby son, Tyler. There is not much left over after that, he says.

"Enough to get a bus card and maybe a meal that I can say I had on my own," he said. "Maybe one of those, it's my treat."

Green is part of the one-third of Chicago's workforce defined as "low-wage" workers. He makes the Illinois minimum wage—currently $8.25 an hour. In April he participated in the "Fight for 15" strike for higher pay.

But afterward, he said, he was uncertain about the effects of a hike.

"I saw the numbers for myself of this Subway," he said. "I did the math, and they would actually be losing money. They'd be going under if they paid us $15 an hour."

Green's internal struggle reflects the tensions policymakers have been debating all year. President Obama proposed raising the federal minimum wage to $9 an hour in his State of the Union address this year. Meanwhile, a bill in the House of Representatives would bring it to $10.10, although observers such as govtrack.us give it only a 3 percent chance of becoming law. In Illinois, Gov. Quinn has said he wants to raise the minimum wage to $10 over the next four years. State Sen. Kimberly Lightford (D-Maywood) introduced the legislation, but the bill is in limbo.

Lightford points to the Illinois Chamber of Commerce, which opposes efforts to raise the mandatory wage, for part of the holdup.

The Chamber, which lobbies state government, files lawsuits and provides networking opportunities on behalf of business interests, has come out against Lightford's bill through an affiliated political action committee.

Minimum wage is meant as a stepping stone to higher-paying work, said Jay Shattuck, executive director for the Chamber's employment law council.

"The minimum wage was never intended to provide a living for a family," Shattuck said. "It's low-skilled, but an opportunity for people to move up or go find another job."

That's exactly what Green wants to do.

"I would hope I would have the drive to do that," he said. "That's been my goal." The owner of the Subway where he works, he said, started out on $4.25 an hour. Shattuck also said he earned minimum wage when he started working.

Fifty-seven percent of low-wage workers in Chicago are 30 or older, according to UIC's Department of Urban and Regional Planning. Lightford argues that some must support families on low wages.

"It's very difficult for a family of four to survive in these economic times on minimum wage," she said. "It's very expensive to have a two- [or] three-bedroom apartment."

Average monthly rent for a two-bedroom apartment in the Chicago area is $966, according to the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development. It would take 81 hours of minimum-wage work every week to afford that.

The federal minimum wage was implemented in 1938, guaranteeing at least 25 cents an hour for workers engaged in interstate commerce. It was expanded in 1966 to include just about everyone. By 1978, it was $2.65 an hour—that's $9.45 in 2013 dollars. Illinois' minimum wage is $8.25, and the federal wage is a dollar less than that. Since the minimum wage has not kept up with the Consumer Price Index, efforts to raise it usually include some provision linking the wage to inflation.

Even that can be controversial. The two political camps both make economic arguments: Either raising wages cuts into businesses' overhead, forcing them to hire fewer people or cut hours and benefits, or higher

SAY WHAT?

Politicians, employers and employees alike all have sounded off recently on the whole minimum wage idea. Here, a sampling:

An increase to the minimum wage, combined with the increased employer costs for the national Affordable Care Act, will threaten the vitality of the industry and result in restaurants closing and workers losing their jobs. —Illinois Restaurant Association President Sam Tola

Fight for $15 seeks to put money back in the pockets of the 275,000 men and women who work hard in the city's fast-food and retail outlets but still can't afford basic necessities. If workers were paid more, they'd spend more, helping to get Chicago's economy moving again." —Chicago Fight for 15 press release

"To have that money, you may be able to have more time and space to do something for yourself. [I'd] definitely be able to help my family better. Mother of my child, my mother, my sister—[I'd] be able to help them a lot."

—Jeremiah Green (above), on what he'd do with the extra money if his wages were raised BRITTANY SOWACKE/REDEYE wages give employees more money to spend, boosting companies' profits and bolstering the local economy.

Economic experts don't have a consistent answer. A recent poll affiliated with the University of Chicago asked economists if they thought raising the federal minimum to $9 an hour would make it harder for low-skilled workers to get jobs. They were split: 34 percent agreed, 32 percent disagreed and 24 percent were uncertain.

The issue has been studied for decades, and results still are contradictory. Recent studies of the literature don't find much effect on employment when the minimum wage is raised. But that doesn't account for other potential effects, such as shortened hours or higher prices.

In the meantime, Lightford said she plans to continue lobbying for a wage increase.

"The businesses will actually see more profits" if wages are raised, she said. "[People] want to spend more because they have more."

Shattuck said the Chamber would continue to oppose the increase.

"Both sides of the aisle are looking concerned about [Illinois'] higher unemployment rate compared to the rest of the country. We're still hovering over that 9 percent," he said. "I think from the Illinois Chamber's perspective, we'd like to see more progress."

“ When you raise the price of employment, guess what happens? You get less of it. ... At a time when the American people are still asking the question, 'Where are the jobs?' why would we want to make it harder for small employers to hire people?" —House Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio), responding to Obama's State of the Union

“ Tonight, let's declare that in the wealthiest nation on Earth, no one who works full-time should have to live in poverty, and raise the federal minimum wage to $9 an hour. This single step would raise the incomes of millions of working families." —President Obama, 2013 State of the Union

E3 WRAP-UP

BY RYAN SMITH FOR REDEYE

With smartphones, tablets and Web browsers continuing to flourish as heirs to the gaming throne, console kings Sony, Microsoft and Nintendo have seen their role as gaming's gatekeepers diminish. But with flashy new consoles on the way—the PlayStation 4 and the Xbox One were previewed at the recent Electronic Entertainment Expo—you'd have to time-jump back to the mid-2000s to find so much excitement for E3.

With this in mind, I took a slow train to Los Angeles and endured gaming's annual party to find the biggest headlines.

Attendees play games at the Nintendo display during the E3 Electronic Entertainment Expo in Los Angeles last week. GETTYIMAGES

AND THE WINNER IS ... SONY

In May, Microsoft annoyed gamers during the initial Xbox One announcement by spending almost as much time demonstrating the new system's power to let you video chat while watching "The Price Is Right" as playing video games. Microsoft continued to stumble when it explained its anti-used game policy and revealed that you'd need an Internet connection to play it. The company partially made up for these missteps with a solid E3 press event that boasted plenty of original titles on the way for Xbox One. But Sony lowered the boom by announcing that the PlayStation 4, at $399, would cost $100 less than its rival. The crowd gave Sony Computer Entertainment CEO Jack Tretton a standing ovation after he said the console wouldn't place any restrictions on used games. As Apple learned from its iTunes DRM mess, people still like to feel like they own the entertainment they purchase.

MORE SEQUELS

Most of the major game titles headlining E3 were sequels to existing franchises: "Assassin's Creed 4," "Battlefield 4," "Call of Duty 10," "Final Fantasy XV." Nintendo was as bad as any offender—announcing yet another Donkey Kong, a Mario Kart and Mario-themed spinoffs. A decent amount of brand-new games was unveiled, but nearly every one was a first-person shooter or driving game—both genres that aren't exactly lacking in choices.

CHICAGO STRONG

Sony devoted part of its presentation to trump the PlayStation 4 as an open platform that will allow small indie game developers to make games for the console with relative ease. Two of the eight games featured on Sony's stage were low-budget titles made in Chicago—"Ray's the Dead" and "Octodad: Dadliest Catch." "Ray's the Dead," billed as a zombie-based action-stealth-puzzle game, is from the slightly demented minds of Chris Cobb and Matt Carter—a pair of Chicagoans who worked on the 2005 cult favorite "Stubbs the Zombie." The "Octodad" sequel is the brainchild of Young Horses, a group of DePaul graduates who stayed in Chicago to live together and work on a wacky game about an eight-legged father's non-maritime adventures. Both are due out for PlayStation 4 in 2014.

Sex: It's more than just genitals

Anna Pulley

» redeye@tribune.com
» @annapulley

Dear Anna,
I'm dating a trans guy, and we haven't had sex yet. Any advice on how to respectfully bone a dude who may or may not be comfortable with his original plumbing?
—Nervous Newbie

Dear Nervous,
The general consensus is "ask him," and I agree that there's something to be said of outright communication. We all have sexual ideas and desires, and we also have a mouth with which to convey those desires. Magic! There's also something to be said of too much communication killing boners everywhere. While I'm never against talking as a general practice, since this is your first time getting down, I'd lean more toward lighter topics like "What turns you on?" rather than "How would you like me to reference your genitalia during coitus?"

While some people might be sensitive talking about their wants and bodies, if you can work sex into your conversations before hitting the sheets, then do so. That should give you a heads-up about whether to put your head down, if you catch my drift! There's no need to whip up an Excel spreadsheet or anything, but having some ground rules usually is appreciated. And when the time comes, don't overthink it too much. See aforementioned boner-killing.

First-time sex is usually somewhat awkward—it's a new person! With new wants, desires, and was that an Enya poster? He's not going to expect you to know how to push all his buttons, just as you shouldn't expect him to know how to push yours. In fact, he might be more nervous because he's not sure how you'll perceive his body. To that end, if he wants to leave some clothes on, then let him. Read his cues. If you try something and he bats your hand away, try something else. Stick to neutral descriptors if you're unsure. I've heard "junk" and "package" get tossed around. He might not have a preferred word that describes certain body parts. Stay present and have fun. Sex is fun, remember? If it's not then you're not playing enough David Bowie.

Like any sex partner, trans or cis, be respectful and remember: The No. 1 ultimate sex rule is that everyone's idea of a good time is different. The other No. 1 ultimate rule is to show your partner how hot you think they are. You're not just having sex with a "trans person," after all. You're having sex with a person—period.

THE ROAD TO INFAMY

STEALING FROM CELEBS IS, LIKE, NO GAME, OK GUYS?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE
Paris Hilton is, like, so 2000s, right? Not anymore. With the release of "The Bling Ring," starring Emma Watson, Katie Chang, Claire Julien and Taissa Farmiga, on Friday, the "social-ite" comes full circle. Based on the real-life shenanigans of a group of L.A. teens who robbed the likes of Paris, Rachel Bilson, Audrina Patridge and even good old Lindsay Lohan, "The Bling Ring" takes us back to the simpler times of 2008 and 2009, when celebs still left their doors unlocked. Wanna try on Paris' Louboutins for yourself? Take a spin through our "Bling Ring" game—and don't hate the player.

If Robert Downey Jr. has his way, he'll soon be as rich as Iron Man Tony Stark. EW.com reports the "Avengers" and "Iron Man" star has signed on for two "Avengers" sequels, due out in 2015 and potentially 2016 or 2017. Downey reportedly made—wait for it—more than $50 million for "The Avengers," which kind of just makes us want to barf all over ourselves.

“One chick tried to stab me when we were having sex. I should so not be telling this story. She was like, ‘True love leaves scars. You don’t have any.’ And then she tried to stab me with a butcher knife. Of course I promptly broke up with her ... seven months later.”
